Protecting our Oceans

We visited the Coral Gardeners on Tuesday 6 May in Moorea to raise our class's awareness on the ocean and to understand why the corals are going extinct.

First we visited their headquarters and went on visiting their premises too. We also did little quizzes and questions considering the sea animals and the ocean.

Then we watched images and movies on their television to show us their numbers of corals and their new application to see where there are good spots to place nurseries underwater and how the conditions are over there. Then we went underwater to see the nurseries that they built next to their house and the corals that they planted.

I personally liked when we went to see their coral trees and nurseries underwater.

I also liked when the girl did their presentation of their team and what they do exactly.

And I liked having free time to play with my friends while being out of school.

As for me this event made me realize that corals are very important for our world and that we should be more careful about them.
